160,000,000 HORSESHOES

Enormous Number Used in the United States and Canada Annually—Rubber Shoes Have No Effect.

"Two million kegs, containing 160,000,000 horseshoes, are used annually in the United States and Canada, approximately speaking," said S. L. Martin, of Boston, who represents an iron manufacturing concern of the east. "That was about the number used last year, and all the hue and cry about rubber shoes and automobiles is raised in the face of a constantly increasing sale of horseshoes. As a matter of fact, the use of rubber horseshoes, which is confined almost altogether to the large cities, is a help to manufacturers. The sale of the old-fashioned shoes goes on increasing, and in addition to that the manufacturers have an opportunity to make the steel portion of rubber shoes. All so called rubber shoes have a rim of steel in them, and it is usually of better metal and gives the manufacturer a wider berth for profits than the old-fashioned shoe."

Machine Had Voice Wrong. They have a story in London of an Oxford don who was induced to speak into a phonograph. Some time later the machine was set going again and he was asked to listen to his own voice. He did so, and after the sound had ceased he said to the assembled company: "It is strange that this machine makes me speak in homely and affected manner."
